Amy Henry is executive director of international education at the Georgia Institute of Technology (Georgia Tech), a position that follows more than a decade of work with study abroad students and programs. The Office of International Education leads student-centered internationalization, and serves more than 6,000 international students and scholars; 2,200 study and intern abroad students; and the 800 students pursuing the International Plan. Henry has degrees from the College of William and Mary and Georgia Tech. She serves in advisory and leadership roles in international education, including as a Lead Trainer for NAFSA: Association of International Educators’ Management Development Program and on the conference planning committees of the Association of International Education Administrators and the International Engineering Colloquium. She is co-author of the NAFSA: Association of International Educators’ e-publication “Curriculum Integration of Study Abroad”.
