Zoila Castro has been involved in foreign language teaching for more than thirty years. She has taught in diverse educational and cultural settings in her native country of Peru, as well as in France and the United States. Her work has involved mentoring and training teachers, designing curricula, and developing course materials, as well as undertaking projects in medical translation, and editorial work. Her areas of interest include language pedagogy, second language acquisition, Spanish Heritage speakers, and Spanish for the professions.