Brands lucky enough to be selected to be on the list benefitted from a phenomenon known as “The Oprah Effect.”

In one extreme example, a product called the LightWedge (a book light) saw its sales soar from $3,700 a day to $90,000 when Oprah added it to her favorite list in 2007.

Oklahoma City tops list of best places to live for both servicemembers transitioning from active duty and veterans

VIENNA, Va. (Thursday, November 1) – In advance of Veteran’s Day, Navy Federal Credit Union, in partnership with Sperling’s BestPlaces, released its Best Cities After Service list – a unique look at the places best suited for servicemembers to consider living after leaving the military. According to data from the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, more than 250,000 military members transition out of the service each year.

The ranking was made by considering 11 metrics of veteran success and wellness, including veteran’s income, unemployment rates, proximity to VA hospitals and military bases, and then coupling it with a suite of quality of life measures, which include factors like affordability, the local economy, access to health resources, colleges and the arts, and more.

The team developed an integrated communications strategy using earned, paid and owned media across online publications, local broadcast, social media and other channels.

The list appeared in USA Today, on Military.com, in nearly 100 local markets and a host of military publications. A satellite and radio media tour delivered more than 20 bookings, and social media posts from members of Congress also got the word out.
