Standard Format

Formatting is not binding and therefore does not require majority approval of the Senate to make formatting amendments.

All Articles, Sections, Parts, Subparts to be ALL CAPS AND UNDERLINED

ARTICLES to be indented 0 inches.

SECTIONS to be indented ¼ inches.

PARTS to be indented ½ inches.

SUBPARTS to be indented ¾ inches.

Items to be indented ¼ inches from the corresponding article/section/part/subpart.

Paragraphs to be indented THE SAME as the corresponding article/section/part/subpart.

There is to be NO // NO spacing unless it is between articles/sections/parts/subparts (if, and only if, words exist under the a/s/p/s) or to separate items from the corresponding article/section/part/subpart.

EXAMPLE:

ARTICLE V. STANDARD FORMATTING

This Article stands for the purpose of illustrating the format a particular former CIO advocates for. It is a cleaner looking format and will actually eliminate unnecessary spacing.

This paragraph is to show how separate paragraphs should look according to the format.

SECTION A. LOOKY HERE!

Look at this section. It pertains to absolutely nothing. Cheers!

SECTION B. LOL

PART 1. ACRONYM

Lol stands for “Laughing Out Loud.”

PART 2. CONJUGATIONS

Here are five English conjugations of the non-verb “LOL”.

1. Infinitive: “to lol.”
2. Past: “I (you/he/she/we) Lolated.”
3. Present: “I (you/he/she/we) Lol.”
4. Future: “I am (you are/he is/she is/we are) lolling.”
5. Past Continuous: “I was (you were/he was/she was/we were) lolling.”
SUBPART a. CLARIFICATION
Let it be known that “to lol” is not an actual verb, but members of the online gaming community refuse to accept this as fact. As a result, people all around the developed world, those who have computers and use the internet primarily in more recreational ways, that is, those who are more likely to be exposed to this irregular non-verb, have been using it exclusively as a way of expressing the action of laughing out loud.